Ladies in lavender string quartet sheet music

The beautiful, nostalgic theme from Ladies in Lavender was presented on the soundtrack of the film by Joshua Bell and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. It has been transcribed for violin and piano by composer Nigel Hess. Hess has long been known in the UK as a music composer for film, theatre and television, as well as music for the traditional surroundings of the concert hall. This wonderful piece is ideal for weddings and other events. Published by Faber Music. Fantasy for violin and piano was originally written for the final scene of the feature film Ladies in Lavender in which two Cornish sisters (Dames Judi Dench and Maggie Smith) attend a London premiere of a young Virtuoso violinist (Daniel Bruhl) who have been nurtured back to health after a tragic accident at sea. Although the piece was supposedly composed by the fictional Boris Danilov, the work of creating an authentic period piece of dazzling violin music fell to the film's composer, Nigel Hess, who used the film's main theme, turning the romantic big theme into an extended, bravura little variation full of dramatic intensity and longing. He has now become a popular piece in his own right, establishing himself (not unlike the Warsaw Concerto before that) as a favorite audience in the concert repertoire. The work was presented on the soundtrack of the film by Joshua Bell with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of the composer. Longtime friend, colleague and great violinist April Kondrat - who tracks scores for her daughter's wedding - provided the necessary motivation for a string quartet arrangement of the theme Ladies in Lavender. The original score of the 2004 film was written by Nigel Hess and performed by Joshua Bell and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. While the music probably takes some inspiration from Massenet's Meditation by Thais, it has emotion, mood and cinematic sweep discreetly its own and would be quite ideal for a super romantic procession of family members and escorts, especially if timed well with the arc of music. Listen to Joshua Bell's great performance: performance:
